Board of Directors

The Foundation's 11 board members, each an extraordinary community leader in her or his own right, bring remarkable wisdom, expertise, depth of commitment and breadth of experience to our work. For all the diversity of their roles and perspectives, they are united by a shared vision of Greater New Haven as a community of expanding opportunity and greater equity. Their service is itself a gift to the community.

Letter from the President & CEO

Advancing Opportunity and Equity: A Future of Action and Impact

As we reflect on the past year at The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven, we do so with a profound sense of gratitude, urgency and optimism. This has been a year of transition, transformation and deepened commitment to advancing opportunity and equity across our communities.

The successful search for a new president and CEO marked a pivotal moment in our journey, reinforcing our resolve to lead boldly in these critical times. With new leadership in place, we step into the future with a renewed vision for accelerating meaningful change, and ensuring that every individual and family in our region has the opportunity to thrive.

As we work toward this vision, The Foundation finds itself in a new place from a year ago. New priorities from the federal government are causing uncertainty, fear and harmful financial strains in our community. In the face of these challenges, The Foundation's values and priorities are not changing.

This moment calls for action. The challenges before us — gaps in economic opportunity, persistent inequities, and systemic barriers — have not disappeared. They continue to demand innovative solutions and collective effort. Through our grantmaking, strategic initiatives and deep community engagement, we are actively shaping a future in which opportunity is not just available but accessible to all.

Strengthening Communities Through Investment and Engagement

Our grantmaking continues to be a powerful vehicle for impact, addressing immediate needs while fueling long-term change. Whether through supporting critical initiatives like Healthy Start, strengthening nonprofits, or funding innovative programs such as New Haven Promise, ConnCAT and NHE3's entrepreneurial support, we are committed to lifting up communities and driving sustainable progress.

Beyond our grantmaking, we have deepened our engagement and partnerships, expanding communitydriven impact. We saw record-breaking generosity in The Great Give 2024, underscoring the power of collective philanthropy. Our capacity to explore pathways to greater equity was evident in our continued work with the Racial Equity Institute and new partnerships with institutions like Quinnipiac University. And our commitment to racial equity and inclusion was deepened by our willingness to face New Haven's uncomfortable history through engagement with the Shining Light on Truth exhibit displayed at the New Haven Museum. The Latine Philanthropy Forum and Black Philanthropy work continued advancing culturally responsive giving, ensuring that philanthropy reflects and supports the rich diversity of our region.

and Board Chair

Leading with Innovation and Collaboration

As we chart our course forward, we recognize that strong leadership and collaboration are essential. The Neighborhood Leadership Program reboot, the Chauncey Fellowship, and the Changemaker Fund are investing in the next generation of leaders. Programs like Women & Girls mentoring and economic security efforts, along with our steadfast support for nonprofits, demonstrate our holistic approach to community building.

DataHaven's 30-year milestone reminds us of the power of data in driving informed decision-making and accountability. We remain committed to leveraging insights and research to shape policies and practices that create equitable outcomes for all.

Looking Ahead: A Future of Bold Action

As we bid farewell to a remarkable leader, Will Ginsberg who, in his final annual address, challenged us to find new ways to stay connected and work together, we embrace the future with determination. The urgency of this moment compels us to be bold, to reimagine philanthropy, and to champion solutions that break cycles of poverty, create economic mobility and lifting up every member of our community.

Thank you for your partnership, generosity, and belief in the power of collective impact. Together, we are advancing opportunity and equity — ensuring that Greater New Haven is a place where all can prosper.

With deep appreciation,

Advancing Opportunity + Equity

Five years ago, The Foundation transformed its work to focus on helping Greater New Haven realize a shared future of greater opportunity and greater equity. Ours has always been an inclusive strategy, embracing all people and communities who call our region home. The Foundation remains committed to advancing this strategic vision.

Highlights Engagement, Giving and Impact

The following pages highlight how we advanced our mission:

"To inspire, support, inform, listen to and collaborate with the people and organizations of Greater New Haven to build an ever more connected, inclusive, equitable and philanthropic community."

ENGAGEMENT

Providing access to knowledge resources and information about Greater New Haven is one of the primary ways that The Foundation pursues its mission. We bring the community together to learn about important issues, inspire local giving and strengthen the commitment to creating a better Greater New Haven.

In 2024, nearly 3,200 people attended 92 in-person and virtual events that included convenings, community meetings, informational briefings, forums, and workshops and trainings for nonprofit organizations.

New Collaborations Advance Narrative Change

In 2024, new collaborations grew out of The Racial Equity Institute conversation and workshop series hosted by The Foundation. Participants have remained in touch after the sessions, and created their own cohorts for expanding the conversations further into their own communities and workplaces.

More than 1,300 community members have participated in the workshops since The Foundation began making them freely available four years ago. The sessions explore the reasons behind the need for greater equity by looking at the historic foundations of systemic racism, its persistence today and how the dominant narrative of White superiority creates resistance to change.

Quinnipiac University is one of several local institutions working with The Foundation to expand the reach of these conversations and help change the narrative.

"Partnering with The Foundation helps us to get these conversations into the classroom and in front of the choir adjacent," said Claude Mayo, Director of the Office of Inclusive Excellence at Quinnipiac University.

Shining Light on Truth

NEW HAVEN, YALE, & SLAVERY

Conversations Confront Uncomfortable Truths . . .

As part of its yearlong series of donor briefings, The Foundation hosted a special guided tour of Shining Light on Truth: New Haven, Yale, and Slavery with exhibit co-curator Michael Morand, Director of Community Engagement at Yale's Beinecke Library and board member of The Foundation.

The exhibit at the New Haven Museum demonstrated that slavery was commonplace in colonial Connecticut and foundational to the development of New Haven and Yale. It also told the story of how Connecticut leaders gathered in New Haven in 1831 to block a proposed all-Black college that could have been the first historically Black college and university in the United States.

... And Societal Challenges

The Basic Needs Fund hosted The Foundation of Hope, How Basic Needs Fuel Broader Change. The panelists discussed how families who struggle to meet basic needs are forced to make such painful decisions as forgoing a doctor's visit or medicine to pay for rent and food. They emphasized that when basic material needs are met with dignity, people in education, job training and other programs are significantly more likely to succeed.

Since its founding in 2020, the Basic Needs Fund has distributed more than $1.41 million in grants to local nonprofits meeting basic needs, including (but not limited to) shelter, food, clothing, hygiene items, transportation, nonprescription drugs, and other essential health care not covered by insurance.

Staying Connected and Working Together

At his final annual meeting as President and CEO of The Foundation, Will Ginsberg reflected on the importance of connectedness for achieving a vision of a community with greater opportunity and greater equity.

"The path to continued progress remains what it has always been," Ginsberg said. "Finding bold new ways to stay connected and to work together."

GIVING

The Foundation works with donors, private investors, foundations, government partners and other funders to increase both endowed and current use funding resources for responding to a broad set of community needs and opportunities. The Foundation is committed to both broadening and diversifying local giving — a key goal of its strategic plan.

New gifts and transfers

In 2024, The Foundation received $33.3 million in new gifts, transfers, and grants, and its combined charitable assets totaled $666,996,298 on December 31. Individuals and families established 35 new named funds and organizations established eight new organization funds. (See complete list starting on page 43.)

- $9.9 million in new endowed gifts, deferred gifts and bequests, providing permanent grantmaking resources for our community.
- $8.3 million in new current use gifts for meeting immediate needs in our community
- $11.3 million in new organization funds. Managing endowed organization funds is a service that The Foundation provides as a registered investment advisor.
- $3.8 million in government and private grants, including grants to The Community Foundation Mission Investments Company (TCFMIC) for connecting capital and technical assistance to underserved entrepreneurs.

CFGNH.ORG/REPORT2024-

Record Amounts Raised for Greater New Haven nonprofits

Donors gave to Greater New Haven nonprofits in record numbers during The Great Give 2024. An all-time high of $3,843,475 was raised for 550 nonprofit organizations serving Greater New Haven. The Great Give has raised $28.6 million for local nonprofits since it began in 2010.

As in years past, nonprofits and other groups came together in support of their favorite causes. In Wallingford, the public access channel WPAA-TV promoted Greater New Haven nonprofits during the event with an in-studio concert and launch party that was streamed to its audience.

Black Philanthropy Inspires Giving and Social Change

Donors and changemakers convened during Black Philanthropy Month, the global celebration of Africandescent giving in all its forms held annually in August. The Foundation's Vineyard Project in New Haven hosted fund holders and supporters in the historic town of Oak Bluffs on Martha's Vineyard. The day included the panel discussion, Reconcile, Challenge, Envision at the Strand Theater.

The Vineyard Project's named fund initiative has resulted in the creation of 14 new permanent funds at The Foundation. (See the profiles of these and other donors who started funds, beginning on page 49.)

Building Trust, Creating Impact: The Latine Philanthropy Forum

Deeply personal tributes were part of an evening of lifting up the generosity of the Latine community, and changing the narrative of what it means to be Latine in America at the Progreso Latino Fund's forum on Latine philanthropy.

IMPACT

The Foundation's grants and distributions support programs that help people, respond to societal needs, and provide opportunities broadly in the Greater New Haven community.

Discretionary resources also support a range of programs, including nonprofit capacity building, and leadership education and mentorship for the next generation of leaders in our community.

2024 Grants and Distributions

In 2024, $31.4 million in grants and distributions were made by The Community Foundation to hundreds of organizations and programs. (See complete list starting on page 108.)

$10 million in discretionary grants from funds that donors established with a preference for such interest areas as the arts, health or basic needs, and from unrestricted funds. The Foundation used these funds to provide competitive responsive grants and sponsorships to nonprofits throughout the year as well as strategic and program grants of The Foundation.

- $6.3 million in designated grants from funds that name specific nonprofits for annual distributions.
- $7.6 million in donor advised fund grants that donors recommended from their donor-advised funds.
- $4.2 million in fiduciary grants to The Community Foundation Mission Investments Company.
- $2.1 million in distributions from a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services grant to support New Haven Healthy Start.
- $1.2 million in scholarships from scholarship funds.

NHE3 Grant Award

Entrepreneurs Access Capital and Assistance

The Community Foundation Mission Investments Company (TCFMIC) is addressing wealth disparities by leveling the playing field for entrepreneurs and business owners.

Its New Haven Equitable
Entrepreneurial Ecosystem (NHE3) has delivered technical assistance to more than 1,146 clients, and secured funding for 414 businesses, creating

Black-Owned: 235
White-Owned: 94
Hispanic-Owned: 50
Multiracial-Owned: 25

more than 200 jobs. Among the businesses served, 63% are women-owned and 77% are minority-owned.

The NHE3 combines incubators, accelerators, co-working spaces, and capital through partnerships with 28 Entrepreneurial Support Organizations, including city and state governments, nonprofits, institutes of higher education and private businesses. The ecosystem also provides targeted support for science and technology entrepreneurs through the Connecticut Consortium of BIPOC Technologists.

In 2025, TCFMIC plans to raise $25 million to start the MIC Innovation and Growth Funds to invest in high-growth startups and provide capital to local businesses.

Promise Delivers Opportunity

New Haven Promise, The Foundation's largest strategic grant recipient, has empowered generations of New Haven students. Over its 15 years of comprehensive programming, Promise has provided 3,000 scholars with $38 million in Promise scholarships and tens of millions more from college and community partners. The Promise Journey — To. Through. And Back. — supports students before, during and after their college years, helping them transition to first jobs and careers. The program has secured 1,500 unique internships and jobs for students, generating $12 million in salary revenue.

Providing Babies a Healthy Start

In 2024, New Haven Healthy Start supported 432 pregnant women, 603 infants and toddlers, 225 fathers and 367 new mothers, making sure that families receive care at critical stages of pregnancy and child development. The program began its work to improve birth outcomes in 1997, and was awarded a new five-year, $5.5 million funding commitment from the federal government, pending congressional reauthorization each year. Senator Richard Blumenthal (D-CT) and U.S. Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-CT) joined staff to announce the award.

Workshops, Trainings and Networking Events Strengthen Local Nonprofits

In 2024, The Community Foundation's capacity building program offered 65 different workshops and trainings to nonprofit leaders, staff, board members and volunteers, welcoming more than 1,200 attendees representing 292 organizations. Topics included finances, grant writing, artificial intelligence, board development and communications. More than 50 organizations received support to work with a consultant on specific and timely projects to build their individual capacity for long-term stability and growth.

DataHaven Turns 30

DataHaven, the go-to data resource for professionals in public and social service sectors in Greater New Haven and across the state, celebrated its 30th anniversary in November. The Community Foundation has been a partner since the beginning, supporting the idea that public data is a resource that should be easily accessed and widely available. The Foundation has invested more than $550,000 in DataHaven, including support for the DataHaven Community Wellbeing Survey and Report.

Neighborhood Leaders Build Community

Participants in The Foundation's Neighborhood Leadership Program spend eight months developing, testing and implementing projects that build community. Upon completion of the training, they are eligible to apply for grants of up to $3,000 to carry out their projects.

After a yearlong pause while undergoing an evaluation, the program has rebooted with a new cohort of local residents who are building connections in their neighborhoods. Mufid Bohorquez is using his experience with the program to create a virtual hub for his City Point neighborhood to organize cleanups, potlucks and other gatherings for people to get to know each other and help others in need. An artist and graphic designer, Bohorquez says the Neighborhood Leadership Program helped him break out of his shell.

"I always look forward to the classes because I come out energized. I leave that place knowing that I'm going to go out and make a difference," he said.

JaTorra Commodore, a relative newcomer to West Haven, enrolled in the program to build connections. A former teacher, she changed careers to become a certified life coach, offering wellness, meditation and yoga classes for teachers and caregivers, kids in classrooms and anyone looking to reduce their stress.

"I saw that a lot of teachers around me needed help and support and were not getting it. I thought, 'Maybe this is my path.' I went out on a limb, started my certification process, and started my business."

Commodore's Neighborhood Leadership project is to bring her classes, workshops and programs to more people in the community.

"I want to bring more programs that help with managing stress and dealing with work-related burnout for people who don't have accessibility to gyms or yoga studios, or who may find those places intimidating," Commodore said.

Chauncey Fellows Launch Dream Projects

Inaugural Chauncey Fellowship recipients Samantha Sims and Jonathan Weiss (pictured with Henry "Sam" Chauncey) are spending their first year after college pursuing their interests through artistic and service work. Sims, a New Haven native and New Haven Promise scholar, is bringing together Black people of the African diaspora with a new tradition called Liberation Table. Weiss is composing a musical, and teaching music in the community. The fellowship was established by the late Edward "Edder" Bennett in honor of Chauncey, former secretary of Yale University, and mentor to generations of students. Anya AitSahlia of Yale University and Julien Sanchez-Levallois of Southern Connecticut State University were named the 2025 Chauncey fellows.

Changemaker Fund Supports Local Leaders

Across the country, state and philanthropic leaders are experimenting with increasing economic opportunity through direct cash initiatives. The Connecticut Urban Opportunity Collaborative (CUOC), formed by The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven, Hartford Foundation for Public Giving and Fairfield County's Community Foundation, is part of this movement.

Working with the national nonprofit UpTogether, CUOC is supporting a guaranteed income pilot in Connecticut called the Changemaker Fund. The program's direct cash assistance provides 120 community leaders with the financial independence to direct their efforts to community building and advocacy.

Girls of Color Mentoring Network Builds Connections

Created by the Community Fund for Women & Girls, the Girls of Color Mentoring Network fosters collaboration among mentoring programs as they each connect girls and young women of color with role models and mentors. In April 2024, Network members collaborated with CT STEM Academy to host the second Science Technology Engineering and Math (STEM) event, giving young women exercises in coding, robotics, rocketry and other enrichment projects. The girls were also introduced to inspiring women of color with careers in STEM who provided powerful role models.

Nonprofits Support Women's Economic Security

Havenly helps refugee women gain employable expertise in commercial kitchens while learning personal finances and other life skills that will help them and their families succeed in their new country. In order to better serve participants with children, the cafe and support organization is adding childcare to its program with a Pathways for Economic Security for Women grant from the Community Fund for Women & Girls.

"The Pathways grant accelerated our shift from vision to action," says Caterina Passoni, Havenly co-founder. "It came at the perfect time, and gave our community hope when hope was hard to come by."

The Pathways program invests in local women, helping them receive education and training for jobs that will support them and their families. It also funds childcare and other services to help them advance their professional lives.

In 2024, the program awarded grants totaling $115,000 to 10 nonprofits that are supporting more than 3,500 local women. The Pathways program has distributed $504,440 since it was launched in 2022.

Funds of The Community Foundation*

The various types of funds that can be established at The Foundation over the course of one's lifetime, as well as through one's estate, are flexible in design. Thirty-five new funds were established at The Foundation in 2024. We thank our donors for their generosity and community spirit.

^{*}As of December 31, 2024; new funds established in 2024 are highlighted in color.

2 Chulas Fund

Established by Lissette Andino

When a merger at Lisette Andino's workplace took her to Connecticut from Rochester, New York, where she grew up and where she was raising her daughter Ariana, she knew that she would have to create a community — a new family of friends.

"I wanted to connect to my Puerto Rican and Latino cultures and communities," she said. She co-founded the Greater Bridgeport Latino Network to develop workplace and community connections, link people together and share information about work opportunities and community needs and concerns. She wanted to create a network "that supported underserved communities and elevated Latinos." She also began volunteering with nonprofits whose missions she cared about.

But as a single mom, she had one firm stipulation: whatever volunteer board meeting or event she was attending, her daughter would be coming with her. They were a duo, a mother-daughter team.

When Ariana was young, Lissette would bring her to board meetings. She would set her up with her homework and a snack and Ariana would be right there in the mix. "As she got older, I'd say 'What do you have for her to do?' and Ariana would help by stapling papers and stamping envelopes," Lissette said.

Ariana greatly admires her mother and loved having the chance to see what giving back really meant.

"I grew up as my mom's shadow as she worked in these communities with nonprofits," Ariana said. "It really influenced me. It was something my mom built for us — a structure here — and it also created a family for us in Connecticut."

Today, Lissette, who has worked in the public utilities for more than 30 years, is the director of Equity and Environmental Justice at Eversource. Ariana works in administrative support at a bulk shipping company. They continue to be a presence all over the state, volunteering at the Hartford Marathon, and at holiday drives and events in the Latine community. Following the hurricane in Puerto Rico several years ago, Lissette spent 10 days there working on recovery efforts.

Lissette has long appreciated the Progreso Latino Fund events. "I love the programming," Lissette said. "The events are impactful and meaningful to me. It is a fund that is trusted and I'm very thankful that The Community Foundation has a Latino Fund."

Seeing the impact
The Community Foundation and PLF have had, and the possibilities that could come from creating a donor advised fund, Lissette and Ariana recently chose to establish their own fund. "I've wanted to do this and am grateful that I am in the position
now where I can,"
Lissette said.

It is called the 2 Chulas Fund. Chulas is a term of endearment Lissette has for Ariana. While it translates to "cute" or "cool" in Spanish, it has a deeper meaning for them.

"We are always together so my mother always calls us her two Chulas," Lissette said. "It speaks to our mother-daughter bond."

"It's representative of us," Ariana added.

The 2 Chulas Fund will focus as well on mother-daughter bonds. They will earmark some of it toward education. "I would like it to support single Latina moms going to school or getting a license or certificate — an educational purpose," Ariana said.

Lissette said they also envision it as an emergency fund for mothers who might suddenly need some financial help.

They also want the fund to focus on fun activities that mothers and daughters can have together. Lissette recalled a time she and her daughter took part in a program that existed because of a grant. It was a six-week dance class for moms and their daughters. Lissette found it to be the perfect time for such a class, when girls ages nine to 12 might start moving in directions beyond their moms.

"We did something we didn't typically do together," Lissette said. "It was so much fun."

She and Ariana want the 2 Chulas Fund to support that kind of program — something other mothers and daughters can find delight in, "building something, doing something different — something they can be part of together."

Bert and Ina's Girls' Fund

Established by Robin Miller Godwin

Bert and Ina were two of the most powerfully important influences in Robin Miller Godwin's life.

Alberta "Bert" Teague Williams, Robin's maternal grandmother, was born in 1902, one of 18 children. A strong woman, Bert was mother of 13, hardworking, deeply faithful, stern, yet very loving. While she didn't have a formal education, she encouraged all of her children and grandchildren to pursue theirs.

Robin's paternal grandmother was Ina "Granny" Flanagan Miller. Born 18 years after Bert, Ina sought an education and became a nurse's aide before further studying psychiatry to become a psychiatric nurse's aide, working for years in the field. While Bert had 45 grandchildren to love, Ina had one — Robin.

For many years both women were rooted in their New Haven communities, Bert in Dixwell and Ina in the Newhallville neighborhood. Alberta went to work after her husband died in 1948. "Bert was a cook, and she and a friend had a restaurant," Robin said. The restaurant was a gathering place, and Bert made certain that families who were in need did not go hungry.

Ina, who was married 67 years, tended not only to her patients but also to people in her neighborhood who might be struggling with their mental health. "She was always able to calm and center someone who needed it," Robin said. She became known as "everyone's Granny."

Bert moved from New Haven to live with one of her sons in California. When Robin was very young, her father and mother separated, and she and her mother moved to California to live with Bert.

"My grandmother Bert wanted to make sure that I had very close ties to my grandmother Ina in Connecticut and to my father," Miller Godwin said. "So every six months she would take me to Connecticut to be with them."

To keep her grandmothers' memories alive, Miller Godwin established the Bert and Ina's Girls' Fund at The Community Foundation. She hopes to support an organization that works to combat hunger in the Dixwell neighborhood and a program providing mental health care for residents of the Newhallville community.

Miller Godwin has long been connected to The Community Foundation as a member of the Delta Foundation, where she created a fund in memory of her mother. That fund supports maternal health programs, particularly ones that focus on young mothers. She was also an inaugural member of The Community Foundation's Vineyard Project, which "recognizes and amplifies the vibrant Black history and culture of our local community and encourages Black philanthropy."

Her hope is that the Bert and Ina's Girls' Fund helps the Newhallville and Dixwell communities to thrive. "My grandparents left a legacy of home ownership, of working hard and caring for their communities, of always opening their homes to friends, family or neighbors in need," she said. "I want the fund to help to foster that kind of caring for your neighbor."

Her grandmother Bert grew ill when Miller Godwin was just 11. "I helped take care of her as she had for me," she said. "She had three daughters and five of her sons in L.A., and we all needed to pull together to provide 24-hour care until she passed. I learned what it meant to care for those you love."

"I couldn't honor one of my grandmothers without the other," she explained. "My life was intertwined with both of those women, and I am the person I am today because of them." Her grandmother Ina lived a long life and was able to be part of Miller Godwin's two children's lives, always there to help.

Miller Godwin, who manages the president's office and the communications team for the Housing Authority of the City of New Haven, will encourage her children to become part of the fund, sharing their ideas about the ways it can support the community.

She recently became a grandmother, and that has only deepened her connection to her family history. "It's brought back how my grandmothers mothered me," she said. "My granddaughter Harper Grace is just seven months old but already she is everything! When I look at her, I see my legacy."

"With this fund, I want the world to know that those two remarkable women, my grandmothers, were here and that they lived beautiful lives."

The Vineyard Project in New Haven Fund Initiative

The Vineyard Project is dedicated to amplifying Black excellence and the vibrant Black history and culture of Greater New Haven. Its named fund initiative has inspired the following donors to establish funds aligned with and providing permanent resources in support of this mission.

Bishop's Orchards Family Fund

Established by Keith and Deborah Bishop

Bishop's Orchards is woven into the very fabric of the Guilford community and the towns and cities that spread out beyond its 313 acres of farmland. The farm has been part of the town since 1871, when Keith Bishop's great-great-grandfather, Walter Goodrich Bishop, sold vegetables, fruits and ice to families along the shoreline. Bishop's first orchard began in 1909.

Six generations of Bishops have run the farm, which now has 100 year-round employees, 180 during harvest time. "Throughout that time, we've continually evolved and worked to be good stewards of the land," Keith Bishop said.

Today, Bishop's Orchards products are primarily sold directly to consumers, with some to farm markets in CT. It has a Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) program, a winery and a robust pick-your-own business in its orchards.

People come from all over to visit the corn maze and pick pumpkins in the fall; to see the llamas, alpacas and goats at the farm; and to pick up readymade dinner items or a fresh baked apple pie.

From their earliest days in Guilford, giving back has been a central tenet of the Bishop family. "The people of Guilford and the larger community have supported our family's farm for more than 150 years," said Bishop. "We feel it's very important to support the people of our communities and the nonprofits that do so much work here. My parents were very involved and now our children are. It's a continuous loop."

Keith Bishop recently retired from the farm's daily operations and remains its board chair and president. His daughters, Sarah Bishop Dellaventura and Carrie Bishop Healy, are co-CEOs and his son, Ryan Warsaw-Fan Bishop, is the farm production foreman.

Giving is part of the daily hum of the farm market. Customers can choose to round up their purchases to provide funds to about a dozen different local charities supported by the Bishops, which raises $5,000 to $6,000 each month. Keith's wife, Debbie Bishop, has been involved in the work of the Susan G. Komen breast cancer foundation for many years and Keith has served on numerous local boards and commissions.

Now, Keith, Debbie and their family have established the Bishop's Orchard Family Fund at The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven to provide funds in perpetuity to organizations that they have long supported. This includes the SARAH Foundation of Guilford, which serves hundreds of individuals with intellectual and other challenges, providing day programs, recreation and leisure activities as well as SARAH Tuxis, which provides housing support.

"My oldest sister passed away 14 years ago, and she had Down Syndrome," Debbie Bishop said. "The SARAH organization and other programs made her life so much richer than doctors said it would be early on."

Keith and Debbie Bishop are also legal guardians of a former employee, an older man who has an autism spectrum disorder. "He worked for us for more than 20 years and had to retire five years ago because of a health condition," Bishop said. "After his parents passed away, he had no living relatives, so my wife and I became his guardians. We want to support SARAH Tuxis, the organization that makes his home possible and to support the recreational programs that he enjoys so much."

Their fund will also support Apple Pi Robotics. "My father enjoyed that one of his grandsons in New Hampshire was participating in a robotics program and he said, 'We need to bring that to Guilford," Bishop said. He did in 2006, and today more than 400 high school students from Guilford and surrounding towns have participated in the program.

"It opens the eyes of kids about robotics and engineering, and it emphasizes teamwork and collaboration," Bishop added.

Bishop said he and his family are excited to think about all the ways the fund will impact people, and they envision that it will eventually support "over a half dozen organizations."

They chose to create it at The Community Foundation "because many of our family members and employees have been involved in The Community Foundation and we want to give close to home, to help our neighbors. Our family has had deep connections to the people here. Our children will carry that forward through this fund."

The Gwendoline and Bronach Bye Fund

Established by Geoffrey Bye

The fund is named in memory of my two wives, Gwen (1928–1993) and Bronach (1943–2023). Gwen was a teacher and Bronach a nurse. They worked in caring professions, so one is not surprised to know that they were both caring women in their personal lives.

Gwen was unable to resist any request for donations to a good cause; the more checks she wrote, the more requests arrived. Hunger and children's issues were her main concern. She was generous with her time in support of our children's schools. She missed the classroom, but made up for it with her volunteering at the three Greenwich schools that they attended.

Bronach had a similar disposition to respond to any request for a good cause, and she became an indefatigable letter writer for Amnesty International. Her nursing career mainly involved caring for college students and nursing home residents — the young and the old.

After retiring she also became a devoted volunteer. She assisted at the Women's Health Clinic on Fitch Street, New Haven; mobile dental clinics that popped up around the state, many years with A Better Chance in Guilford; the Hole-in-the-Wall shop in Guilford; and latterly at SARAH's Cupboard in Branford.

The Bye Fund has been established to support organizations that Gwen and Bronach would have approved. In so doing their lives are memorialized, and worthwhile causes are supported.

It is very satisfying to have been able to establish the fund in their names with the help of the caring staff of The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven.

God Bless Their Soles Fund

Established by Karimah Mickens

For 30 years Linda Mickens was a neonatal intensive care unit nurse, "providing tender care to infants and their families," her daughter Karimah Mickens said. Linda was also an artist who made sculptures out of bronze. But she put her art on hold as life got busy with raising children and materials became expensive.

Then in 2019, Linda Mickens began to get back into her art, spending more time as the pandemic unfolded and as she retired. She experimented with new materials, using recycled paper, wire frames and found objects. She made sculptures of the "everyday angels among us," that turned into a collection she called God Bless Their Soles, which celebrates the resilience and strength and joy of African Americans. She also creates pieces influenced by the far-reaching impact of gun violence on African American communities.

A "social art activist," Mickens has said she is "deeply inspired by the sounds of Black folk and my southern roots — the blues, jazz, gospel, the familiar sound of cloth scraping across a washing board and Grandma's laughter."

Her work has been acclaimed in the press and widely exhibited at the Creative Arts Workshop; the Ely Center; John Lyman Hall; and in a permanent collection at the River Road African American museum in Donaldsonville, Louisiana. She's received support from foundations and funds, and is at work on life-size sculptures of a New Orleans funeral procession and a series of angel benches to be placed all around New Haven.

Her daughter Karimah happily watched it all unfold. "My mother has always centered our family," Mickens said. "She was a single mom raising three kids working the third shift, working all the time to give us opportunities. She taught us to have courage and to explore and try new things."

With Karimah's mother turning 70 in 2024, she wanted to find a way to honor her and decided to establish the God Bless Their Soles Fund at The Community Foundation. "The God Bless Their Soles Fund is dedicated to helping artists succeed by removing barriers to creativity and providing essential support," Mickens said. "Inspired by my mother, we recognize the powerful impact of art in bringing people together and influencing the world. We aim to make it easier for artists to support themselves, celebrate their talents and create meaningful contributions. Together, we can empower artists to reach their full potential and make a lasting impact on the world."

Karimah Mickens, Hamden's town clerk, has long known of the work of The Community Foundation. She is a member of the New Haven Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Incorporated. Established in 2006, it was the first charitable endowed scholarship fund established by an African American sorority at a community foundation. The Community Foundation has also supported Amplify the Arts Festival in Hamden, which Karimah Mickens founded. The festival showcases the voices and perspectives of youth, LGBTQ+ and BIPOC communities in Hamden. "I've been a public servant and volunteer my entire life," she said. "And I know the great work of The Foundation."

With The Community
Foundation's Vineyard Project in New Haven encouraging Black philanthropy, contributing $2,000 to people creating a fund, Mickens knew the time was right.

"I want to remove barriers for aspiring creatives," Mickens said. "I have a vision and want to be sure that local artists have supplies, and that there are more spaces where they can work. I want to help support access so their art can be part of exhibitions and seen in galleries and museums."

"Art nurtures us," Mickens added. "It uplifts us, encourages us to question things and to think. Art brings my mother so much joy and I want to find ways to have other artists have that joy."

The Grace Fund

Established by Jim Kenny

When Jim Kenny moved to New Haven to work in development for Yale University after working at universities around the country, he felt very much at home. He loved the Wooster Square neighborhood. He got involved in civic groups and became co-chair of the annual Cherry Blossom Festival.

Then he began thinking about creating a fund that would make a lasting impact for people in the Greater New Haven community. He knew the focus would be education and it would be named the Grace Fund to honor his grandmother.

Grandma Grace spent her life teaching English. In her later years, she found a new calling teaching English as a second language to immigrants, working with them on reading and writing and making certain they were connected to the resources they needed.

He talked often with Grace about all that education can bring to a person's life and how vital it is that everyone has access to it. "She felt no one should ever be overlooked and no one should ever not have an opportunity for education because of the type of life they were dealt or where they were born," Kenny said. "She always spoke about how all people are deserving of respect, care, love and support."

He also knew he would establish the fund at The Community Foundation. As Yale University's Assistant Vice President for Development, Schools and Units, and in his role co-chairing the festival, he'd seen The Foundation's impact.

"The Community Foundation is a very responsible financial organization and it's very clear the staff have an incredible ethos of being involved in the community, not sitting behind their desks and just handing out checks. They know the community," he said. "In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, they created an economic investment vehicle focused particularly on businesses in the Greater New Haven community created by Black and Brown founders. Those were very strong decisions, and it made me want to be part of it," he said.

"The reason I believe so strongly in education is I have seen firsthand through my father's life and many of my uncles and cousins that after receiving an education the pathway for their lives was transformed," Kenny said.

When Kenny's father was a boy, he was one of nine children living in rural Connecticut. Because of his family situation, he had to support himself starting at the age of 11. So he worked hard, first with a paper route, then at restaurants. He wanted to go to college but had no way to get there, so he hitchhiked each way to a community college until a neighbor saw what he was doing and helped him buy a used car.

Growing up, "I didn't have everything I wanted but I had everything I needed," Kenny said. His father and mother both said that no matter what they would help pay what they could for their children to go to college.

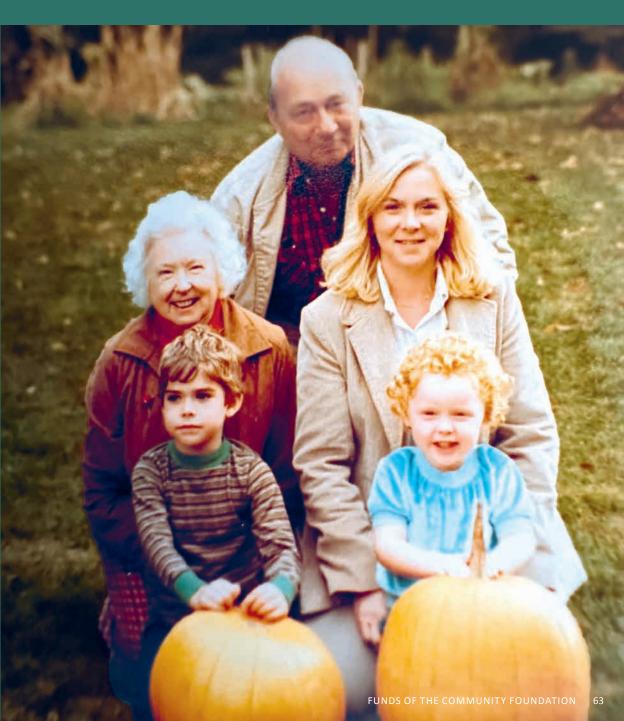

He saw how college shaped his own life. "I was a very quiet, reserved kid when I started my undergraduate degree at Castleton State College in Vermont," he said. "But I had the good fortune of being part of a campus community that encouraged students to become involved." By his senior year, he was the student body president of the college and the entire Vermont college system. He learned how to lobby the state legislature and the governor for funds for education.

He went on to graduate school at Colorado State University, affording it thanks to a graduate assistantship and a position as a hall director.

He chose his career — working in development, raising funds for college and universities — because he wanted to center his life around making the college experience available to as many students as possible. "I believe in the mission of Yale because we admit students regardless of their ability to pay, so the entire undergraduate experience at Yale is accessbased," he said.

While the Grace Fund is in its formative stages, Kenny has been talking with his family about which nonprofits it will support. "My mother was also a teacher for 30 years and my sister is a teacher. Fundraising for Yale, I know the importance of giving to nonprofit organizations," he said. "There are lots of great organizations in Greater New Haven focused on education that are receiving support from The Community Foundation and we want to learn more about them and others we don't yet know about. I feel very strongly that access to education is critical to allowing someone to live a transformational life."

La Voz Hispana De Connecticut Fund

Established by Norma Rodríguez and Abelardo King

La Voz Hispana is not only the largest Spanishlanguage newspaper in Connecticut. It's also one of few remaining print-based local news organizations in the country. Covering New Haven, Bridgeport, Hartford, Waterbury, Stamford and Norwalk, the weekly paper is a vitally important resource for Connecticut's Spanish-speaking communities.

When founded in 1993 by Abelardo King, the paper was primarily focused on New Haven and relied on contributed stories from people who volunteered for the love of it. After a few years, King formed a business partnership with Norma Rodríguez, who became the president and publisher. The partnership took the paper to the next level. Advertising revenue grew, helping the paper add staff to support coverage across the state.

La Voz has grown to a circulation of 135,000 and remained dedicated to print, "because of the continued influx of immigrants from 21 Spanish-speaking countries into Connecticut," Rodríguez said. "In their countries, they are accustomed to having morning and evening print newspapers."

Having succeeded in media themselves, Rodríguez and King are now using their philanthropy to help the next generation.

The two established
La Voz Hispana Fund
at The Community Foundation as part of the Progreso
Latino Fund's 20th anniversary fund challenge. The fund will provide scholarships to Latine
students from Greater
New Haven who have a passion for journalism or communications.

"The Community Foundation as an organization has credibility, seriousness and integrity. The help it provides to nonprofits and organizations in Greater New Haven is so strong," Rodríguez said. "We want our fund to be part of The Foundation because it is run by intentional, focused, giving people who know the communities they serve."

Rodríguez envisions the scholarships benefiting Latine students who are involved or interested in student journalism and communications, including those who, "might not have the A and B grades, but they have talent; they have this interest," Rodríguez said. "They might not have had the opportunities that led them to have A and B grades, but we want them to have this opportunity."

King said he is proud that they have built La Voz into a must-read for Latine people across the state and "for members of the mainstream media because of the paper's political impact and content," King said.

Both said they have found great purpose and joy working in the field of journalism. "I love journalism," said King. "La Voz is the love of his life." Rodríguez added.

"We are excited about encouraging the next generation," she said.

Legacy in Full Bloom Fund

Established by Alisha Crutchfield

When Alisha Crutchfield moved to Westville in 2016, she fell in love with the neighborhood. "It's peaceful and family and community centered," she said. She'd left behind life in New York City and a career in retail and celebrity fashion styling (and serving as fashion director for the Miss Universe Organization).

A new mother in an unfamiliar city, she often drove past an empty office space on Edgewood Avenue in her neighborhood, and the space kept calling to her.

She envisioned starting a new chapter in her career and quickly found support from the city of New Haven and through The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven. "Resources from New Haven's Department of Economic Development and The Community Foundation allowed me to start and sustain my business," she said. She took part in a Quinnipiac Entrepreneurship Academy and Connecticut Community Outreach Revitalization Program (ConnCORP) program for minority and women-owned small businesses. "It fueled my business acumen, helping me to set up a proper business plan and efficiently process my financial statements."

She leased the Edgewood Avenue space and got to work, taking down the blinds in the former office. Light spilled all around. She used the expansive space as a canvas and created BLOOM, a multi-concept retail space that houses a flower and gift shop, café, and wellness room, plus indoor/outdoor event spaces. Locally made products like jewelry, soap, candles and artwork fill the space.

"We house a café, a flower shop, event spaces, a cozy front patio, and a wellness room which turns into a co-working space where people working in that field can indulge in aromatherapy as they work," she said.

In addition to commerce, BLOOM is invested in community enrichment — hosting workshops and life's array of celebrations.

"It's a community center reimagined. A neighborhood oasis, where people stop in to have lattes and catch up with friends," Crutchfield said.

BLOOM recently expanded to include upstairs space, now a "retreat meets bed and breakfast — rooted in well-being" where a group of friends recently enjoyed a wellness weekend, and the Yale School of Medicine ran a music mindfulness study.

The possibilities continue to unfold for BLOOM "where people from different backgrounds meet up and get to know one another," she said. "I love serving the community in an innovative way."

"That leads me to the Legacy in Full Bloom Fund," she said.

Crutchfield established her fund at The Community Foundation because she has seen the far-reaching impact of The Foundation in her own life, out in the community and as a member of the advisory committee of The Foundation's Community Fund for Women & Girls.

Her fund taps into the power of community. "Coming from a low-income, poverty-stricken community in Boston where I grew up, I persevered because of the strong mentality that my family and the community instilled in me," she said. "I want young people in the New Haven community to thrive."

The Legacy in Full Bloom Fund is part of the The Foundation's Vineyard Project in New Haven initiative, whose purpose is to be, "a powerful voice in the conversation of addressing racial equity in new ways."

Crutchfield wants to leave a legacy for her young daughter and to honor "the strong traditions of educational excellence and etiquette established by our ancestors in the face of unimaginable circumstances and through the harshest of times," she said. "As a successful entrepreneur, dedicated community member and mother, I know the power of education and etiquette in every aspect of pursuing my dreams. This fund will provide grants to organizations that will uplift and empower Black youth in their pursuit of education, using intellect and poise."

"I want our young people to be ready to take on everything that can come in the workforce, whether they are working in corporate America or as small business entrepreneurs or in other workplaces," she added.

The Legacy in Full Bloom Fund will support community organizations, including the Leadership, Education and Athletics in Partnership, Inc. (LEAP); Connecticut Center for Arts and Technology (ConnCAT) and New Haven Promise. She also plans to support youth arts organizations.

Crutchfield calls her giving concept "the power of one," and encourages individuals who come to BLOOM to contribute even a dollar to the fund. Already people are embracing the idea, "giving a dollar or $20 or $150," she said.

She named her fund for a quote she's lived by throughout her adult life: Bloom where you are planted. "It's an affirmation that has gotten me through so much," she said. "I want this fund to do the same for others."

Robert Fulton Jackson and Annie Mildred Jackson Fund

Established by Jared Pollard

Jared Pollard thinks often about his grandparents, Robert Fulton Jackson and Annie Mildred Jackson — about their humble beginnings growing up in small towns in rural South Carolina. With his establishment of a new Community Foundation fund in their honor, their legacy will live on.

"Education was literally the gate of opportunity for them both," Pollard said. "My grandmother was the first in her family to graduate from college. Her parents were sharecroppers. Without an education, there wasn't a lot of opportunity for her in South Carolina. My grandfather grew up in very modest means, and he was trained as a brick mason at Vorhees University in South Carolina. He was one of the first in his family to attend college. It allowed him to build his craft; to provide for his family; and to let my grandmother later pursue advanced degrees in education to follow her dreams."

As a young couple, the Jacksons moved to Washington, D.C., "because jobs were plentiful there." Robert developed work as a mason; Annie taught science and math in Washington, D.C., public elementary schools for more than three decades.

Robert Fulton Jackson used "his life savings to purchase a row house in D.C. in the 1940s for $14,000 in cash," Pollard said. It would become the family's home for the next 75 years. Jared and his brother as well as their cousins grew up in Connecticut but they spent weeks each summer at their grandparents' house.

"I thought it was such a big house when I was young, but it was a narrow row house. But they had a library — a room full of books," Pollard said. "My grandmother would encourage us to read all the time and then we would talk about the books."

"My grandmother was my biggest champion and cheerleader," he said. She encouraged Jared and all of her grandchildren to delight in and dedicate themselves to learning.

After Jared's father died, his grandmother helped out to ensure Jared and his brother could continue attending private school.

grandchildren in all the ways she could."

His grandmother cheered Pollard on as he studied economics and political science at Tufts. She attended his commencement from Columbia Business School, where he received his MBA with honors, and she was proud of his career on Wall Street at Goldman Sachs. Today, Pollard, who lives with his wife and two sons in New Jersey, is a senior director of Global Equities at the Royal Bank of Canada.

Jared's grandparents were fixtures in the Galbraith A.M.E. Zion Church in D.C. Robert helped with church renovations, and Annie established and volunteered for decades with the church's youth ministry and education program. The Jacksons also volunteered and donated to organizations combatting homelessness in the city and to many educational causes. "They felt they were blessed to raise two daughters in their home, to have jobs they loved, and they each felt a deep obligation to help others," Pollard said.

His grandmother lived in that D.C. home until she passed away peacefully at 96 in 2022. "She was bedridden the last few weeks, but she still had her sense of humor and her strength," Pollard said.

It was her wish that they sell the house and divide the proceeds between her daughters and four grandchildren. Pollard chose to use some of his inheritance to create the Robert Fulton Jackson and Annie Mildred Jackson Fund at The Community Foundation. His brother Ian also contributed to start the fund.

A fund had been created at The Community Foundation ten years earlier to honor his late father, Glenn J. Pollard. "Working with The Community Foundation has been such a great experience," he said. "The staff is fantastic, and the fund is well managed, and it has grown, which has allowed us to provide annual scholarship awards to student athletes at Wilbur Cross High School. I want the funds to continue on in perpetuity long after I am gone."

The Robert Fulton Jackson and Annie Mildred Jackson Fund will support scholarships for students from the D.C. schools where his grandmother taught; will help support programs at Galbraith A.M.E. Zion Church; and provide assistance to Washington, D.C., homeless shelters.

"This is a way to convert that initial $14,000 investment my grandfather made 75 years ago - using his life savings to create a home for his family — and turning that into generational impact. Although no members of our immediate family live in Washington, D.C., today, we want our grandparents' influence on their community to live on."

Robert and Ann Lyons Memorial Fund

Established by their children

When Robert Lyons Jr. and his six siblings were growing up, they were loved unconditionally and always encouraged to be their own people.

Their mother, Ann Lyons, who was known as Nancy, made certain that each of her children developed their own interests and passions. "We all had our own growing-up experience," Robert Lyons Jr. said. "We are all different individuals now. Our mom was very proud of all of us with respect to our own walks in life."

Nancy filled the Lyons' home with music and flowers from her garden, and she imbued it with a deep and abiding faith. "Seven days a week, she would pray a rosary for each of us on our day," he said. "If I was a Wednesday, she'd pray for me, and on Thursday she'd pray for another of my siblings. Faith was front and center throughout her life. If you think of a walking saint, she comes pretty close."

Their father, Robert Lyons Sr., worked at and then led the family business, the Bilco Company, the basement and metal door manufacturing firm in West Haven, a company spanning three generations. An inveterate designer, he held 40 patents for his inventions.

"He loved his work, and he loved his family," Robert Lyons Jr. said. "For his 100th birthday, we made a word cloud for him. His children, grandchildren and even great-grandchildren all chose words that represented him and it was a masterpiece of all of his characteristics and qualities. Right in the middle were the words, 'loving' and 'kindness.' Those were words that everybody chose."

The Lyons' 71-year marriage was also filled with love. "Even in their 90s, before my mom passed, they were blowing kisses to each other. They grew old together and loved each other right to the end," Lyons Jr. said.

The Lyons often had a full house — for family dinners, backyard barbecues and gatherings with their children, grandchildren and greatgrandchildren, extended family and their many friends.

Nancy Lyons died in 2021. When Robert Lyons Sr. died in May, 2024, their seven children chose to honor them by establishing the Robert and Ann Lyons Memorial Fund at The Community Foundation.

The designated fund will support two organizations the couple cared deeply about — Yale New Haven Hospital's McGivney Advanced Surgery Center at the Saint Raphael Campus and Catholic Family Charities.

Nancy Lyons was a longtime volunteer at the Church of St. Rita as a Eucharistic minister, CCD teacher and choir member. She cared about the work of Catholic Family Charities.

"My dad was very active in the community and served on boards; and his alma mater, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, was very important to him," Robert Lyons Jr. said. "He spent quite a bit of time with Sister Anne Virginie (who for decades led the Hospital of St. Raphael), and he devoted much of his philanthropy and community leadership time to St. Raphael's Hospital." While he volunteered for many organizations and boards, "the hospital was very near and dear to him," Robert Lyons Jr. said.

The family chose to create the fund at The Community Foundation because they knew of the impact of The Foundation's work and the commitment of the staff members to the Greater New Haven community.

"After my father passed, we reached out to Foundation staff, and they turned on a dime for us," he said. "Everything went smoothly, and it has been exactly what we would have hoped for."

"I see the fund as a legacy of our parents' generosity to the community existing in perpetuity, supporting two organizations that provide benefits to others in the world."

Santisteban Family Fund

Established by Denise Santisteban

From the first moment she stepped onto a stage, Denise Santisteban loved everything about theater.

"When I was a kid, I was cast in an elementary school play and that was it! I was in love with it," Santisteban said. "I worked in all kinds of arts growing up. I did theater and dance as I went through school. In my professional life, I've worked in all facets of theater — costume design and props. I've been a stage manager. I've directed and acted."

"What I discovered during all those years is that the heart of theater is storytelling," she said. "You have to have a great story."

Santisteban is the curator of Idea, Story and Tours Programs for New Haven's Festival of Arts & Ideas, where she has worked since 1996. "I bring the humanities part of the festival together, setting up talks, panels and discussions about ideas, about what we can learn from and explore with one another." Before that she was an equity stage manager in the San Francisco Bay area.

She is also a storyteller, performing with the Institute Library Story Sharing Group and the Ubuntu Storytellers.

"As I got older, I began thinking about how there is a gap. There is such a rich tapestry of historical Hispanic culture," she said. "I'm Mexican and Peruvian. Not a lot of Latine stories are told on the stage."

She wanted to find a way to preserve and share those stories, and find a way too for emerging Latine artists to bring new works to the stage and to storytelling venues.

At the same time, she began thinking about leaving a legacy. As a member of The Community Foundation's Progreso Latino Fund's (PLF) advisory board, she was inspired by PLF's challenge — encouraging members of the Latine community to create their own funds in support of nonprofits and causes they care about.

Giving back has long been a part of her adult life. She volunteers with several arts organizations, and is the board chair of the Connecticut Arts Alliance.

She talked with her daughter, Rio Santisteban, and they decided to establish the Santisteban

Note: The following profile was written prior to the passing of Denise Santisteban on April 15, 2025.

Family Fund at The Community Foundation.
She found that when she discussed setting up the fund with Community Foundation staff, "They made the process simple and smooth—it was great."

"I want the fund to support individual artists and Latine theater, theaters that are getting started and are trying to sort things out," she said. "There's a lot of talent here in New Haven and I'd like the focus of the fund to be here."

She knows how challenging it can be for a small Latine theater to build an audience, and for a storyteller or theater artist to have sustained work. Having worked in theater on the West and East Coasts, she's seen some small theaters thrive and flourish and noted that many others "aren't here anymore."

She said that as she moved through her career, people who worked in the arts always encouraged her. "They would say 'Stay with it,' 'Keep going.' I found this wonderful community of people who were giving and creative and that was the kind of life I wanted." Santisteban said.

"We want to be able to give that to others," she said. "I think even more voices can be raised up. We can weave a new tapestry of Hispanic stories."

Dr. Edward A. Bouchet Fund

Established by Hopkins School

New Haven native Dr. Edward A. Bouchet was a physicist and educator. At the time he completed his dissertation at Yale in 1876, he was the first Black person in the country to earn a doctorate from an American university and just the sixth American to earn a Ph.D. in physics. His academic achievements were recognized with his induction into Phi Beta Kappa. After graduate school, he taught chemistry and physics for 26 years at the Institute for Colored Youth in Philadelphia, one of the few academically rigorous schools for African Americans in the country. Bouchet continued to teach and work in education for most of his life.

Bouchet's illustrious academic career began at Hopkins School, where he was valedictorian of the class of 1870. In honor of Bouchet, his intellectual drive and his legacy of achievements, Hopkins School has established a charitable fund in his name to provide experiential learning opportunities for New Haven students through impactful community programs.

The fund was created by Hopkins School in partnership with The Foundation's Vineyard Project in New Haven.

"Dr. Bouchet is one of the alums that Hopkins is most proud to be associated with," says Hopkins Director of Community Engagement Angela Wardlaw, who spearheaded the fund's establishment. "In a real sincere way, we want to be actively involved in the community that we are a part of. Whether it's the arts, or technology, or something else, we want kids in the community to have the opportunity to pursue something that they are interested in that ordinarily would not be available to them."

At a signing ceremony in front of a portrait of Bouchet: Hopkins Head of School Matt Glendinning; Angela Wardlaw, Hopkins' Director of Community Engagement; Erica Bradley, Manager of Community Philanthropy for The Community Foundation; Will Ginsberg, former President and CEO of The Community Foundation; and Leon Bailey Jr. Vice President of Human Resources of The Community Foundation.

Woodbridge Park Association Strategic Investment Fund

Established by the Woodbridge Park Association

The Woodbridge Park Association (WPA) is one of the oldest land trusts in the state, beginning in 1928 with Newton Herbert Street's donation of 82 acres in honor of his mother, Alice Newton Street. By placing the land in the trust of a nonprofit, Street preserved a large swath of nature uniquely situated near the center of town.

"It was absolutely visionary," says Catherine Wick, the association's president. "The organization was founded with a nonprofit board to run it."

The all-volunteer nonprofit board of directors is responsible for preserving Alice Newton Street Memorial Park, now 100 acres, and making it accessible to the public. The main trail is manicured, wide, and relatively flat, while other paths are winding and natural.

"This park in particular is one of the most heavily used of all the open space areas in the town. We're aware of making it accessible to as many people as possible," Wick says.

To preserve the WPA's financial assets, the board created an endowed organization fund, which will perpetually help fund park maintenance and strategic land purchases.

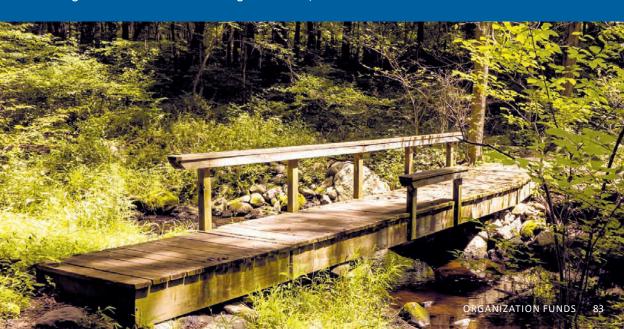

The Woodbridge Park Association is a distinct organization from the Woodbridge Land Trust, which owns and manages many of the other natural areas in Woodbridge. Combined with town-owned lands, the tracts create a greenway that circles the entire town, and connects to wooded trails that travel from New Haven through Bethany and beyond.

While the land preserves may be located in Woodbridge, Wick emphasizes that they are available to all, and that the mission of the WPA is to serve the region.

"There are a number of area towns that don't have much land available to preserve. One thing that we in Woodbridge can contribute to the broader community is to preserve as much land as possible," Wick says. "We understand that we take advantage of the city. Many of us work, dine, shop and use the city every day. Preserving our land and making those resources available to the public is our way of contributing something of value to our neighbors in the city. We view it as a regional asset, and we welcome everyone."

Enola Aird Fund For The Community Healing Network

Established by Leon Bailey Jr.

The Community Healing Network is dedicated to freeing the world of the lie that was used to justify the enslavement of Africans and has continued to perpetuate anti-Black racism down to the present day — the lie of White superiority and Black inferiority.

"Our goal is to eradicate the lie forever," says Community Healing Network Founder Enola Aird. "Attitudes and behaviors are handed down with every generation. Much good is handed down, but we have to leave the toxic behind. If we do not do this work of freeing ourselves from the lie, then the assaults on our dignity will continue."

The Community Healing Network brings together Black people from around the world to heal from the trauma caused by anti-Black racism. Its programs include a weekly online healing circle for a global audience and in-person Emotional Emancipation Circles in different cities. Developed in collaboration with the Association of Black Psychologists, the emancipation circles create opportunities for participants to share stories, and deepen their understanding of self-worth, relationships, and communities. The programs also promote emotional wellness skills for living a fully healthy life.

"Racism adversely affects a person's self-image and mental functions, your ability to walk with confidence in the world, and thinking clearly," says Aird. "It makes the accomplishments of Black people all the more remarkable and is what gives me enthusiasm to do this work."

To support the work of the Community
Healing Network over the long term, Leon Bailey Jr., Sr. Vice President for Human Resources and Organizational Culture at The Community Foundation created the Enola Aird Fund For The Community Healing Network.

"For me, this fund is getting at the root cause of the problem, and if we don't do that we'll be working around the edges. I know the work will be successful," Aird said.

Creating a Community of Young Leadership through Discovering Amistad

In 1839, an African named Sengbe Pieh led an uprising aboard the Spanish ship Amistad by using a loose nail to free himself and his fellow captives. Despite not sharing the same dialect, the Africans were able to take control of the ship and demand that the captain sail them back home.

The captain instead sailed to Connecticut, where the Africans, members of the Mende tribe in what is now Sierra Leone, were arrested for mutiny. Their case, which was appealed all the way to the Supreme Court, ultimately led to their freedom and became a touchstone of the abolitionist movement.

The Amistad's inspiring story lives on through the Discovering Amistad program, which brings students from across Connecticut aboard a replica of the ship to learn the history and understand their own power for making social change in the present.

"He had a nail," says Discovering Amistad Executive Director Paula Mann-Agnew, who uses the story of Sengbe Pieh's resourcefulness as a lesson to help students realize their own leadership potential. "What do you have? What are you going to use?"

Recent grants of $30,000 and $7,500 from The Community Foundation supported programming for local students that connect the Amistad story and the Mende people's struggles with the social and racial justice issues of today. The lessons also focus on the powerful themes of the Amistad uprising: leadership, resilience, courage and the importance of community.

Since 2015, Discovering Amistad has served 42 school districts and educated over 20,000 students, visiting ports in Stamford, Bridgeport, Norwich, New London, Mystic and Martha's Vineyard. The ship's home base is the Canal Dock Boat House on Long Wharf in New Haven, which also houses a museum and is the site of a leadership academy for students in Greater New Haven.

"We are helping students understand that they can be change agents — that they can make a difference," Mann-Agnew says.

The leadership academy is a 30-hour program that involves such community service projects as park clean-up and letter-writing campaigns to local government and school officials. Students also explore the possibilities for enacting change through art. Students write music calling for environmental change and social justice and develop visual art projects that interpret their own lives through the lens of the Amistad.

"The legacy of the Amistad becomes that sort of thing where you realize you are very much a part of your own experience in this world, and it is up to you to make life not only better for yourself, but your community," Mann-Agnew says.

Discovering Amistad is educating teachers as well. Mann-Agnew says she often finds a deficit in what teachers have been taught.

"We realize that many of these teachers, although they're excellent teachers, they themselves have never had African American studies. They themselves have never learned about the Amistad story from an inclusive perspective," Mann-Agnew says.

For Mann-Agnew, the program is a profound way to connect with and honor her heritage through New Haven's history.

"One thing that's important to me is being a part of an organization that celebrates history from a resiliency, cultural perspective and inclusive perspective. I've had an opportunity to give respect and acknowledgment to my ancestors."

The Power of Advocacy

Court Appointed Volunteers Protect the Best Interests of Children

In any given year, there are more than 7,000 children in Connecticut courts under child protection, including over 1,000 in New Haven alone. The need to safeguard their best interests, as Josiah Brown knows, is great. Brown is the executive director of Connecticut Court Appointed Special Advocates (CT CASA), a New Haven-based social justice organization that helps improve outcomes for children at risk.

"Research shows that a key to the resilience of a child who has experienced adversity and trauma is having a relationship with at least one caring adult," Brown says. "Our volunteers provide that, and we're an organization where a modest investment can go a long way in changing the trajectory of a child's life."

The organization is aligned with a national CASA movement, which provides volunteer advocates to help youth involved in the court system because of abuse or neglect. CASA recruits, trains and manages volunteers who engage with foster care cases — in which children are removed from their home — and protective supervision cases in which children remain with their biological family if it's deemed safe. "Our advocates can play a role in preventing a child's entry into the foster care system," Brown says.

Volunteers serve as court appointed advocates for an 18-month term, with the average volunteer committing 10-15 hours per month to the role. "Advocates seek to build a positive relationship with the child they've been assigned to, and whenever possible with their family members," Brown says. Volunteers, who range in age from 20s to 70s — come from diverse professional backgrounds, including law, healthcare, education and social work.

Volunteers are appointed by a judge and typically support two to three children during their service. Before meeting their assigned children, they receive 30 hours of traumainformed preparation. Once assigned, the volunteer must meet with their child at least monthly, and conduct a fact-based gathering of information through meeting social workers, therapists, educators and medical professionals involved with the child. The volunteers submit written reports to the court to help inform judges in determining the best interests of the child. "Every child involved in the court system has an attorney; and one of our responsibilities is to complement the roles of the attorney, and social workers, who have heavy caseloads," Brown says.

CASA also works to identify community resources like early childhood, after school and summer programs, and job opportunities for children to help them stay on track to graduate from high school and plan beyond. Last year, CT CASA served more than 150 youth, supported by 100 volunteers, and expanded to seven of ten courts statewide. That work is managed by Brown and a small staff of five.

Brown points to funding and capacity — both of staff and volunteers — as primary challenges. "We're getting more case appointments; our program is growing," Brown says. "We need additional volunteers across the state." CT CASA currently receives about one-third of its operating support from federal dollars passed through the state judicial branch on a competitive basis, but also relies on foundations and individual donors to support its work. The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven granted $10,000 to support the organization's general operations, and helped connect CT CASA to donors interested in its cause. "The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven has enhanced the visibility around our work, which helps lead to more volunteers advocating for more children."

Building the Parental Bond Through Reading

Prison Reading Program Fosters Connection Between Incarcerated Parents and Their Children

Joy Haenlein has always been a passionate advocate for literacy. Her interest in using reading to improve family connections led her to volunteer with CLICC (Connecting through Literacy: Incarcerated Parents, their Children and Caregivers), a New Haven based nonprofit that uses books and mentors to foster communication between incarcerated parents and their children. "When I started volunteering in 2009, we ran a test pilot program through Danbury Federal Prison with a handful of incarcerated mothers," Haenlein said. "We found the experience was positive and helped parents learn more about their kids."

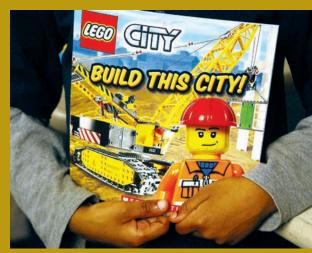

Since then, CLICC's program has expanded to seven prisons across Connecticut, and Haenlein has grown from volunteer to the organization's executive director. CLICC also developed a specially designed curriculum in partnership with Columbia University's Teachers College. "Children of incarcerated parents often experience stigma, shame, stress, trauma and social isolation," Haenlein says. "We train our mentors to use books, characters, settings and plots, to explore relationships between parents and kids."

Children select the books that they and their parents both read and discuss through in-person meetings, video chats, letters and phone calls. The meetings and interactions are among the key metrics that CLICC tracks to measure impact. "That [increased communication] helps to create deeper conversations and strengthen bonds between parent and child," Haenlein says. "Research has shown that both literacy and stronger family relationships help reduce recidivism rates."

General operations funding from The Community Foundation — $70,000 over two years — has been vitally important to the program's growth and impact. "We have used those funds to purchase books and to fund training for our youth mentors," Haenlein says. Many of the youth mentors are college students — including several from Yale's Undergraduate Prison Project. "Having college students mentoring our kids, especially our high school-aged youth, is particularly important because it feels like a peer." The mentoring component, Haenlein says, has shown to help children process the emotional struggle of having an incarcerated parent. And, she adds, the youth are becoming better readers.

The parents also benefit from having mentors. Through weekly group sessions they talk about their parenting challenges and concerns. "Oftentimes, we see a lot of peer-to-peer mentoring from the incarcerated parents who share their own experiences and try to help each other." CLICC also helps parents prepare for their release dates by connecting them to employment and family support services. But the biggest benefit is the stronger family relationships and connections. "Better relationships with their children can provide a stronger social safety net," Haenlein says, "and better connection to community."

Authoring a New Story for New Haven

Job training, youth programs creating hope and community at ConnCAT

Erik Clemons believes in the impact of stories. The stories told about a community, he says, often reflect how a community feels about itself. Since 2011, the Connecticut Center for Arts and Technology (ConnCAT), where Clemons is CEO, has been helping author a new and empowering story and vision for New Haven neighborhoods that have suffered from poverty and neglect.

"ConnCAT has helped a community of people — many who probably stopped dreaming — to hope and dream again," Clemons says.

Since its founding, ConnCAT has trained nearly 1,000 adults for jobs in in-demand fields, and served thousands of young people in its summer and afterschool programming. The vision for its operations is modeled on the Manchester Bidwell Corporation in Pittsburgh, created by the community leader Bill Strickland. The Community Foundation provided an initial grant for its feasibility study, and a subsequent $1 million grant over four years to help build ConnCAT's New Haven-based facility. Partnering with Yale New Haven Hospital, ConnCAT began with two training programs: medical billing and coding, and phlebotomy.

"We started small and served fifteen students in each class," Clemons recalls. Programs have since expanded to include a Culinary Arts Academy and BioLaunch, a training program for entry-level positions to support the Elm City's rapidly growing bioscience sector. All ConnCAT training programs are free and range from four to seven months in duration for participants to earn state or industry-related certification credentials.

Job skills are only part of the ConnCAT program. "Through our career pathways program, we help [students] with job-seeking skills including a personality assessment, resume-building, and interview skills," Clemons says. He estimates that to date, more than 70 percent of program graduates have been placed in jobs.

But it's more than adult learners who are building better futures at ConnCAT. Through a partnership with New Haven Public Schools, more than 2,000 middle and high school students annually come through ConnCAT's doors to take advantage of its art studio, where they can learn photography, drawing, painting, dance and digital technology.

"We use arts as a vehicle for academic achievement and building a sense of community," Clemons says.

The physical space is as important to Clemons as the programming. "We want ConnCAT to be a place of beauty and dignity where people [are inspired] to dream beyond their current circumstance," Clemons says. The facility by design features natural lights, bright colors, wall art and music playing. "We believe that our surroundings can influence performance."

For its next chapter, ConnCAT will become part of ConnCAT Place on Dixwell, a $180 million, eight-acre redevelopment project led by its development arm, Connecticut Community Outreach Revitalization Program (ConnCORP). The project plans to transform urban blight into a vibrant community beacon featuring a grocery store, 184 units of housing, a performing arts center, a food hall, retail space, an office building, child care center, and ConnCAT's new headquarters.

For Clemons, it's all part of writing a new story for New Haven, especially in traditionally marginalized neighborhoods. "ConnCAT is helping people in our community to re-author their stories, thereby recasting their lives," Clemons said. "I am most proud of that."

Growing the Arts

Rebranded Arts Festival Bringing Creativity, Diversity to CT Shoreline

When the Guilford Performing Arts Festival launched in 2017, it was designed as a threeday weekend showcase of music, dance and theater. "The initial aim was to create a celebration that would bring the community together and leverage the wealth of talent right here on and around the Shoreline," says Peter Hawes, the organization's executive director. "It's evolved to include artists from around the world as well as from around the block, and to incorporate educational and human-service elements. We see it as our mission to entertain, inspire. empower and unite the community."

Through the volunteer-run festival — which is held every two years — artists perform in dozens of venues across Guilford, centered on the historic Guilford Green but also in churches, the library and community center, businesses, restaurants and a senior center; it drew a record 5,600 people in 2019.

Then COVID hit, forcing a scaled-back version of the festivities in 2021 with fewer shows and volunteers. "We knew 2023 would be a build-back year," Hawes says. But the lessons from the pandemic also provided an opportunity to reshape the festival and rebrand it. Hawes says the smaller event in 2021 — with six acts down from 73 shows in 2019 — made the festival more digestible for attendees. "When we organized our event in 2023, we expanded it to seven days with events every night leading up the big weekend festival," Hawes says.

With financial support from The Community Foundation, the organization also marketed the event under a rebranded name — GreenStage Guilford Live Arts — and began to plan events in addition to the biennial festival. "Symbolically, the GreenStage [branding] speaks to the historic green where we put our main stage; to the new ("green") work that we commission from Connecticut performers; and to our aspiration to put on events that are as environmentally sound as possible," Hawes says.

The Community Foundation's grant funding supported promotion, including posters, flyers, direct-mail pieces, social media posts, and local newspaper ads to extend the arts to underrepresented groups and more broadly raise awareness of the festival. "In collaboration with Guilford Public Schools, we conducted a dance residency for their unified sports program," Hawes says, "and also held four open mic nights at a local market to build community and attract a new group of people to our festival."

The Community Foundation support was part of a larger marketing spend aimed at broadening the festival's appeal to a wider demographic and bigger geography. "Traditionally, most attendees have come from Guilford, Branford and Madison," Hawes says. "But one-third of guests in 2023 came from outside those towns, including New Haven and New London." The 2023 festival also skewed younger and more racially diverse — an outcome that, Hawes says, the arts have a unique ability to create.

"We want [festival] performers and audiences to represent as broad a swath of humanity as we can," Hawes says. "The arts reach hearts, minds and bodies; sparking joy, breaking down social barriers, fostering empathy, creating a shared sense of belonging, and providing a gateway for people to pursue their own creative journeys."

Building Community

MakeHaven Driving Creativity, Community

When MakeHaven, a makerspace on Chapel Street in New Haven, first opened its doors in 2012, it attracted a few dozen members. But as demand for creative spaces for hobbyists, inventors, and entrepreneurs skyrocketed in recent years — particularly post-pandemic membership reached nearly 800 last year, says J.R. Logan, the organization's executive director.

Logan's vision is for MakeHaven to serve as a catalyst for creativity and entrepreneurship for the region for both members and the general public. The 12,000-square-foot facility features numerous tools for creative types, including 3D printers, laser cutters, textiles, printing presses, pottery wheels, cast and mold making machines, welding and blacksmithing tools, and even a media center for podcasters. The facility, which is supported by 40 volunteers, is accessible to members every day of the year. But it's not just the physical access that Logan values; it's also financial accessibility.

"We want a low [cost] barrier to entry," Logan says. While standard memberships cost $60 a month, MakeHaven offers a sliding scale as low as $10 a month for income-eligible members. Logan estimates that nearly one-quarter of members qualify for reduced rates. With help from The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven — which invested a total of $30,000 in MakeHaven over two years — the organization has expanded its educational offerings to include 120 different micro credential badges which reflect a basic ability to use the facility's various tools.

"Earning a badge is a requirement to demonstrate basic safety in using a tool," Logan says, noting that last year MakeHaven awarded more than 3,000 micro credential badges. "While [our mission] is not specifically for job training, those [micro credential] skills are often helpful for in-demand jobs," Logan says, "so our services allow people to explore and build those skills."

Last year, MakeHaven also hired an education coordinator to better serve members and the public through one- or two-day workshops focused on more technical skills such as using milling or CNC machines. Additionally, MakeHaven has expanded its program to include semester-like courses, including "Pathways to Trades," which provides a deep dive into metalworking and woodworking. "It provides exposure to help people decide if they want to pursue a trade-oriented career."

Increasingly, Logan is seeing more members using MakeHaven to advance entrepreneurial ventures, a trend he would like to continue. "From member surveys, about 10% of members roughly 80 people — are trying to build a business using our makerspace," Logan says, "with half wanting to build an invention and half starting a craft business." Logan says scaling such business ventures can be challenging, but MakeHaven converted a couple of store fronts > in New Haven to enable members to sell their goods — and with modest results. "About 25% of our entrepreneurial members have seen an increase in income as a result of their [membership-related products]," Logan says.

> With a modest $600,000 annual budget, Logan says membership has grown steadily through word-ofmouth recommendations and building partnership connections with schools and veterans groups. The most rewarding part for Logan has been the creative community that MakeHaven has brought to life. "It's great to have a center of creativity where individuals make things with their hands, and enrich their lives and the community."

Protecting the Environment and Building Community

Quinnipiac River Fund Researcher Uses Grant to Lead Cleanups

As it travels south from Meriden's Hanover Pond to New Haven, the Quinnipiac River flows through one of the most industrialized areas of our region. Quinnipiac University Professor Courtney McGinnis has been testing the water quality along this section for more than a decade, supported by grants from the Quinnipiac River Fund. In 2024, she received additional funding to lead community cleanups of bulk trash illegally dumped near one of her 14 monitoring sites. "We know the impact that tires and plastics can have on our environment, and they are sitting adjacent to the river," McGinnis said. Partnerships with Quinnipiac University, Hopkins School and the town of North Haven resulted in three cleanups that removed several dumpsters worth of trash. "What's more community building than picking up trash in a beautiful forested area?" she added.

To date, the fund has granted more than $3.2 million to local researchers and organizations working to keep the river clean, identify pollutants, and make it more accessible for residents to enjoy.

Everyone associated with the Quinnipiac River Fund is saddened by the passing of Nancy Alderman, longtime advisory board volunteer and environmental activist.

Investments and Financials

The Community Foundation's combined charitable assets were $666,996,298 as of December 31, 2024.

The Community Foundation Corporation, which manages more than $500 million of The Foundation's charitable endowment and the assets of more than 160 unaffiliated nonprofit organization fund partners, produced a return of 10.8% net of all costs of investment management, lagging slightly its market benchmark. For the year ended, the long-term strategy outperformed versus the benchmark in global equities, absolute return, and fixed income asset classes. However, the private assets' exposure continued their sluggish returns and weighed down overall results. Our continued attention to long-term investment goals has historically mitigated brief periods of underperformance while remaining focused on producing long-term value-added results.*

^{*}Past performance is no indication of future results. The Corporation is a Connecticut-registered investment adviser.

^{*}Complete audited financial statements of The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven and affiliates, which include the Valley Community Foundation and integral footnotes in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, are available at cfgnh.org/financials.

^{}The Community Foundation completed a successful seven-year partnership with a private foundation for stimulating mission investments in the region. In 2024, The Community Foundation returned $77 million (originally valued at $42 million) to the independent foundation and sold the resulting $40 million of mission investments back to the locally controlled entities, and eliminated the related liabilities.
